THERE IS NO DEATH

There is no death! The stars go down To rise upon some fairer shore; And bright in heaven's jewelled crown, They shine forever more.

There is no death! The dust we tread Shall change beneath the summer showers To golden grain or mellow fruit, Or rainbow tinted bowers.

The granite rocks disorganize To feed the hanging moss they bear; The leaves bring daily life, From out the viewless air.

There is no death! The leaves may fall, The flowers may fall and pass away; They only wait through wintry hours The coming of the May.

There is no death! An angel form Walks o'er the earth with silent tread, He bears our best loved things away; And then we call them dead.

He leaves our hearts all desolate; He plucks our fairest, sweetest flowers; Transported into bliss, they now Adorn immortal bowers.

The bird-like voice, whose joyous tones Make glad these scenes of sin and strife, Sings now an everlasting song Amid the tree of life.

And when he sees a smile too bright Or hearts too pure for taint and vice, He bears it to that world of light, To dwell in paradise.

Born unto that undying life, They leave us but to come again; With joy we welcome them—the same Except in sin and pain.

And ever near us, though unseen, The dear immortal spirit tread; For all the boundless universe Is life—there are no dead! —Sir Edward Bulwer-Lytton.

The record for two boxes of fine Florida tangerines, fresh from Deland, Florida, where Mr. Elliott has been spending several days. Nobody knows how much the force appreciates this fruit.

In a note, Mr. Elliott says he will do all he can to assist the Chamber of Commerce—and everybody in Hickory knows this was spoken from his big, generous heart—and he calls it Hickory's third best asset, he placing the building and loan first, the Record second and the Chamber of Commerce third.

In the name of all the men, girls, wives and boys connected with the Record, here is health and long life to you, J. D.—may you always wave.

WAR UPON PAIN

Pain is a visitor to every home and usually it comes quite unexpected. But you are prepared for every emergency if you keep a small bottle of Sloan's Liniment handy. It is the greatest pain killer ever discovered. Simply laid on the skin—no rubbing required—it drives the pain away. It is really wonderful.

Mervin H. Soister, Berkeley, Cal., writes: "Last summer after tramping around the Panama Exposition with wet feet, I came home with my neck so stiff that I couldn't turn. I applied Sloan's Liniment freely and went to bed. To my surprise, next morning the stiffness had almost disappeared, four hours after the second application I was as good as new."

ON GALLIPOLI

Turks are Brave and Enemies Respect Them.

(By Associated Press.)

Sydney, Australia, Jan. 31.—Some interesting incidents of the last day of the allied operations on the Gallipoli peninsula are reported in delayed correspondence from the official press representative with the Australian forces at the Dardanelles. He tells of the daring manner in which the Turks sought to learn the extent of the withdrawal of the allied forces and pays tribute to the Turks as an enemy.

"Four days ago," he writes from Anzac, without date, "just as the first light began to broaden into a bitter wintry dawn at seven o'clock in the morning the Australian sentries at the parapets at Quinns Post saw about thirty Turks creeping up from behind the hummocks of broken earth which separate our front trench from that of the Turks. Their heads appeared about fifteen yards away. Twenty-six of them—or thereabouts—were crawling down into a small depression between the trenches where for the moment they were hidden from this part of the line. But the other came boldly across straight to the center of Quinns trench. For a particular reason our men let them come. They walked straight up to the slanting wire netting screen set on sloping framework which protects our trench from the bombs. They have just such another fifteen or twenty yards away—caught hold of it in their hands and pulled two short lengths of it down. They threw half a dozen bombs—there was a scatter to each side amongst our men in the trench; and the trench jumped the leading Turk."

"He had a rifle in his hand with bayonet fixed. He landed on his feet, turned to his right and strode down the trench. Four men were leaning against the wall of the trench wound-up by the bombs. He pushed past them and straight into the dark mouth of our boomwork—that is to say a section of trench with a tight roof of earth and beams overhead. As he strode into the darkness, just in the mouth of it, a sergeant met him. The sergeant was coming the other way, also with his bayonet. The two faced one another in the narrow way. They parried and guarded past. The Turk seized the sergeant's bayonet and the sergeant wrenched it away. But by this time an unwounded Australian was coming up the trench from behind the Turk. That settled the man's fate. He was bayoneted from behind and before at the same moment and a shot from a third man also hit him. He fell dead on the narrow floor of the trench. His comrades had run away—I believe they scattered in front or our bomb."

"On the breast of the brave man, who lay there dead in the bottom of the trench, our men noticed a little strip of bright color. It was a couple inches of ribbon twisted through his buttonhole—a bright cherry-colored ribbon with a narrow white strip near either edge of it. It was redder with blood, but there was no mistaking its identity."

A German Invention.

"It was the ribbon of the Iron Crescent. It is the first time anyone here has seen it. The Turks have instituted—or the Germans have instituted—for them—a decoration on the pattern of the German Iron Cross; except that in the Turkish order the ribbon is red instead of black, and the medal is a crescent instead of a cross. This was the first Turk we have come across who had gained one. He was clearly chosen to lead this exceptionally daring reconnaissance on account of the bravery which won him the cross on some former occasion. And the deed which he performed on this occasion was as brave as any man could do. The Turks, who are quite as well aware of our difficulties that there may be in our position here during the winter as we are ourselves, and who have read all the discussions in parliament and the London papers as to whether we should hold on here or leave the peninsula, have for the past two weeks been constantly feeling at night to see whether our trenches were any less strongly held. They have tried all along the line—and the place where they tried first, with one exception, was Quinns. Obviously to lead the attempt from so deadly a post as Quinns they choose this brave man—it is said that at one time the Turks had to offer non-commissioned rank to every man who went into the Turkish Quinns trenches. If ever a man deserved an honor, this man did."

Don't Laugh at It.

"The people who have seen that little strip of ribbon and who have seen the sort of deed that gained it—that is to say the only people whose opinion on the subject is worth anything—do not laugh at the Iron Crescent any more than they would at the grave of General Gordon. Most of the war is no more likely to be won by our sneering at Iron Crescents than by the Germans making fun of Victoria Crosses; the great deed that has been done is not in the least altered by the fact that some people are too ignorant to recognize the deed or too foolish to see the type of criticism which we have seen in some newspapers which seems to wonder whether we can fight the Turks as well as we otherwise should when the troops in the peninsula so obviously do not hate them. One might ask these people how much better they expect us to fight anyway. But it is sufficient to wonder since when has it been impossible for the British race to fight an enemy if it respects him."

"For very assuredly the same incapacity, in that case, must meet the Turks as well as the Australians and New Zealanders. Some curious incidents which happened a few weeks ago help to prove this."

"I think the Turks are celebrating either a feast or a fast. Anyway, near daybreak one morning, there came out of their trenches at Quinns a packet tied to a string, thrown so that it lobbed near our parapet and lay outside between the trenches. Of course our sentries waited for it to explode or fizzle or burst into smoke or for some such devilry. The sergeant near it looked at it very carefully through a periscope. While he was looking Turkish hands must have come up and waved and then a cautious head. A head on our side went up too and gradually a line of heads on each parapet; and before the sergeant knew what was happening the packet had been stepped round the netting and into the deadly area between the trenches and was bringing back the packet."

"It was a small packet of cigarettes, and in it scrawled in indelible pencil and in badly spelt French were the words, 'A Notre Herox ennemis,' 'To our heroic enemies.'" words, 'A Notre Herox ennemis,' 'To our heroic enemies.'"

Some Bully Beef

"Of course some return had to be made, and so our men threw over a tin or two of bully beef. Presently back flew a piece of paper wrapped round a stone. It read, 'Bully Beef Non.' After that we threw some sweet biscuits and a tin of jam. Other cigarettes came back. I have seen some of them. They had on them in the same pencilled writing 'Notre cher ennemi' or 'Femex—probably meant for femex—avec plaisir,' that is 'to our dear enemy—with pleasure'; another reads, 'Envoyez milk,' 'Send us milk.' Then one of them waved down with his hands and shouted 'Fin!' and our men waved back and down gradually went two boxes of smiling heads, and after a pause of a minute or two the bombs began to fly again. They had begun at half-past eight and they lasted till about a quarter past nine."

"The same courtesies repeated themselves next morning—an officer of ours was on the parapet for a short time and the Turks, I believe, sent a message to say that they were sorry they had not the best brand of cigarettes, but they hoped the ones they sent would be accepted. They also asked not for food but for souvenirs. Our men threw over a pen-knife. Our officers picked up a pack of cards which turned out to be a bomb and for the moment there was just a suspicion of treachery—but it was found to be a bomb wrapped as the Turks do wrap their bombs, in flannel, and with a faulty fuse—a relic of some previous fight. The courtesies continued and ended as before. They were not repeated because they were going rather far."

"There were some of our newer Australian soldiers—Seventeenth Infantry—and that is how they regard the Turk and the Turk regards them. The most pathetic evidence that I have heard of is a little irregular wooden cross found in the scrub, just two splinters of biscuit box tacked together with the inscription, 'Here lies a Turk, Poor Abdul would probably turn in his grave if his ghost saw this rough cross and—take care! But he need not take it ill if he but knew. It was put there in all sincerity. Some Australian found him and buried him exactly as he would bury one of our own men—with that little homage to mark the resting place of a brave man fighting for his country.'"

OVER 1,900 SCHOOL CHILDREN EXAMINED

Raleigh, Jan. 31.—When the medical school inspection work in Northampton county was finished up last week and the totals were counted, it was found that 40 schools had been visited and 1914 school children had been given medical examinations. Dr. C. A. Bulla who has been in charge of the work reports to the state board of health, under whose auspices the work was done, a total of 651 defective children found, or a rate of 34 per cent defective among those examined. These defects as indexed by the state board of health for follow up purposes are: defective teeth, 423; defective vision, 77; diseased tonsils, 107; adenoids, 33; defective hearing, 6.

According to the plan of the work, the parents of the children were notified of these defects by the inspector at the same time recommended the proper treatment. By the aid of the score card system and the services of the teacher the board is able to keep in touch with the child until its defects are treated, thus making good the services of the inspector.
